

Certificate III in Individual Support (Disability)

CHC33015 CRICOS 089224D

Do you have a passion for helping the elderly and disabled? Learn how to provide the best quality care from industry professionals.

Support workers are arguably the backbone of Australian health. Leading the way in professional health care support, support workers make a valuable contribution to the daily lives of many elderly Australians living in residential care facilities. Offering constant personal, physical and emotional support and round-the-clock care to enhance the quality of life to people in need, care workers are often considered heroes in disguise.

This qualification reflects the role of support workers who complete specialised tasks and functions in care disability services; either in residential, home or community based environments. Workers will take responsibility for their development, facilitation and review of individualised service planning and delivery.

What You'll Learn

- To provide home and community support services to support independence and wellbeing and individualised support
- Strategies to support community participation and social inclusion and communicate and work in health or community services
- Facilitate the empowerment of people with disability
- Contribute to ongoing skills development of clients using a strengths-based approach and gain an understanding of established person-centred behaviour supports
